Ask the Expert

Sarah Coulter, Ph.D.
Food
Technology
Specialist

Q How can I retain the quality of my packaged food?

A Food products spoil differently, whether through microbial growth, discoloration, oxidation or even moisture loss. Modified atmosphere packaging (MAP) is a way to help preserve the quality of packaged food. By replacing the earth's breathable atmosphere in a package with a pure gas or a gas mixture, the shelf life of products can be significantly extended without losing quality. Typical MAP gases include nitrogen, carbon dioxide and oxygen; the right mix of these gases depends on the food product and how it spoils. The achievable shelf life of products packaged with modified atmosphere gases depends on the type of food, the packaging material, the initial microbial load and the storage temperature.

In a marketplace in which consumers value quality, MAP can provide significant benefits to both the retailer and the consumer—resulting in a product that looks good, smells good and tastes good far longer.

For a Freshline® guide to MAP from Air Products, call 800-654-4567 and mention code 418.

LEADERSHIP

For Tetra Pak, Aseptic Technology Leadership is not a short term proposition. It is a mind-set we have always carried through from our organization to our Tetra Therm® Aseptic VTIS processing system.

Leadership takes time, devotion and investment in tools, people and competence. It is all about commitment to the food industry.

Leadership also means continually looking into the next decade. Our new generation of the Tetra Therm® Aseptic VTIS will continue to enable the industry to answer the markets thirst for value added food products.

Tetra Pak's next evolution in aseptic technology will not only enable higher line performance, it will simply set new standards.

You're welcome to visit us at www.tetrapakprocessing.com/ - or get in touch directly: processing.na@tetrapak.com
